Hyo Myoung Kim, Richard Moon, Dan Rees, Barry Reigate, Caroline Rothwell, Jenny Wiener

Lexicon brings together new work from six artists who graduated from Camberwell College of Arts between 1993 and 2006. The title of show is taken from a term that Caroline Rothwell, one of the six artists, uses to categorize her work. In this show Lexicon describes the range of processes and working methods the artists make use of in order to articulate a range of ideas: the vocabulary of producing art and the way ideas manifest themselves through the working process.

Recurring themes and crossovers emerge. Ideas of corruption, subversion and interrogation surface in the diverse range of work. Having all studied at Camberwell the six artists have gone on to develop their practices in a variety of media including painting, photography, drawing, sculpture and installation. Their work embodies a sense of rigorous enquiry – an analysis of the world and the possibilities for making work.

Hyo Myoung Kim works with computer, photography, sound, text and video. His works interplay with the meaning, structure and transition in artistic media and communications.

Richard Moon says his work strives to create a particular effect through the re-contextualisation of various images, taken largely from anachronistic photography and re-interpreted in oil on canvas. www.richard-moon.co.uk

Dan Rees' work depends on the actions of others; the processes that inform the ecology of artists and their respective practices in turn shape Rees' numerous works. www.re-title.com/artists/dan-rees.asp

Barry Reigate approaches high art production with an earnest dumbness, enshrining the most basic instincts of desire and horror in all their awkward, puerile, and embarrassing glory.

Drawing upon a diverse range of sources, from first contact drawings to site-specific historical archives, Caroline Rothwell's drawings, sculptures and installations consider evolving relationships between humans and the natural environment. www.carolinerothwell.net

Often combining intricate technical drawing with layers of silk-screened geometric shapes, Jenny Wiener's practice revolves around numbers. www.forensicfairytale.com
